HOMES VS BOARDING HOUSES

Are of the Result of the Earthquake in San Francisco

It is the opinion of the people who have observed the attitude of the general public during the past three or four weeks that one great good will come out of the disaster—San Francisco will become what she has not been for years, a city of homes.
The cosy cottage, the shingled bungal-ow, the convenient flat, will replace the family hotel, the boarding houses and the apartment house.

It is not that the inclination of the people for these last-mentioned modes of living has been destroyed but that they are physically afraid of a return of them. Six and seven story apartment houses were very common in San Francisco before the quake. With good elevator service, the top floors were considered the more desirable on account of view, sun and light. At five-teen minutes after 5 o'clock on the morning of April 18th, the occupants of them would have surrendered all their possessions for ground-floor rooms. As these high buildings rocked and groaned and twisted, as plaster fell and crockery crashed, there came a seashell feeling, a "goneness" of the stomach, a terror of the soul, a wild longing to get feet upon the earth, unstable as it was at that particular moment. Occupants of cottages, of moderate-sized dwelling houses or flats can from no idea of the convolutions that these unstable apartment houses and hotels went through—for their destruction has demonstrated the fact that they were unstable, with flimsy walls and foundations of mud. And the terror that their wild rocking inspired has not yet died out of the hearts of those who went through it—nor will it for a long time to come.

A consequence will be that people will want low buildings as dwelling places. This is shown by the advertisements inserted asking for houses that consist of only one floor. And as a result of this desire for homes will come a spreading of the city all over the peninsula. The sand hills of the Richmond, Sunset and Parkside districts will be leveled, and everywhere will spring up real homes where children may be decently reared, where a man may feel that marriage is not a failure after all.

People will be driven to the suburbs too. Already the houses of Alameda, Berkeley and Oakland are as full of tenants as they can hold. Houses are not obtainable there. People live across the bay who had heretofore only vaguely considered doing so.
Many of them will like it, will stay—that is, if the Southern Pacific can be induced to improve its boat and train service. Then Marin County, one of the most beautiful and the most neglected in the State—a county of beautiful forests, green valleys, running streams, snug hills and towering mountains, all lying within half an hour of San Francisco—will get its share of the hotel and apartment house residents.

And a good thing it will be. Visitors to San Francisco have long criticised it as a city without homes. They have observed the wretched boarding house life, the huddling of people in garishly gorgeous apartments, and they have shaken their heads and said that it all boded no good for the future of the town. Plenty there were who agreed with them, and who will be glad if the boarding family hotels and boarding houses in particular are to be things of the past. These places had evolved a type of woman of whom little that is good can be said—the professional boarder, who preferred the lazy life of the public place to the home; who shirked all the responsibilities of married life, and looked only for such tawdry pleasure as could be found in association with women who, like herself, made the public declaration that they would not work for any man.

It was rather hard on the man, to be sure. It limited his existence to working, eating, playing cards with a vapid lot of people, listening to twaddle gossip and inanities enduring the nagging and carping of a wife soured by her unnatural surroundings and longing for a real home. He had no prospect of one then, but the earthquake may change things for him.

It will be good for the children too.
There is nothing worse than a boarding house child. Inheriting the instincts of a slovenly mother who is contented with such a life, the child grows up pert and unendurable, wise beyond its years, selfish, unrestrained, totally lacking in real refinements. All these characteristics increase in vir-dence with the years, and result in another boarding house woman or a worthless man. San Francisco had too much of this, and if the disaster but abolishes this phase of the city life, it will have repaid the community for the harm it has done.—Sacramento Bee.

"COWBOY NELL"

Interesting Female Caught While Robbing "Store"

CALIENTE, Nev., May 15.—"Cowboy Nell" and Hughey Monroe, her alleged husband, were arrested in the act of robbing the Nesbitt Brothers store at DeLamar last evening. Yesterday was the regular pay day, and the company disperses monthly about $25,000 in wages. Plans were laid to rob several of the large business houses known to carry large sums of money on pay days with which to cash checks for employees. Two of ficers hid in the building, and the iron doors were wrenched off their fastenings. At 2:15 a. m. Harry Turner, the Bamberger-De Lamar messenger opened fire, and the two threw up their hands and surrendered to Harry Leach, one of the officers. Frank Sanborn, the assayer for the company, was in league with "Cowboy Nell" and Monroe. He gave himself up this morning and said he was threatened and coerced into the scheme.

It was known for several days that an attempt was to be made to rob the town, and everything was in readiness for their reception. "Cowboy Nell" came into Caliente Sunday with a hand satchel filled with dynamite and said she was going to outfit at De Lamar with a horse and two burros and go out into the hills prospecting.
She had in a full supply of stage in-female attire. When she returned to Caliente today she was in men's clothes and looked anything but what she was.
